An Eastward Migration

A movement is reported from Nebraska that will, if pursued, reverse the usual process of emigration. Heretofore, the settlement of this country has been from east to west. "Go west, young man," has been the slogan ever since Greeley's time, and before his time it was the universal practice, as it has been since. Emigration within the limits of this country has meant moving west.

But now it is reported that many farmers in Nebraska have joined to buy up land in western New York. This New York land can be had cheaper than land in Nebraska, and when the Nebraska men obtain the tracts of land that they desire, their purpose is to move east and settle on those New York farms.

The causes of this movement are, first of all, the cheaper cost of land. Then, the proposed settlers from the state of Nebraska get into a beautiful country, with diversified hill and dale, plenty of soil that is either rich, or can with comparative ease be made rich. The productivity of the soil is fully as great as that in Nebraska, or can be made so. The great markets are near at hand, and the prices of farm products are higher in New York than in Nebraska. It is reckoned, also, an infusion of western energy and enterprise will also help the general conditions in New York.

On all accounts the move seems to be a promising one, and it is altogether likely that the Nebraskans will benefit themselves to a much greater degree than the Minnesota men did when they sold their land in Minnesota and moved to the Isle of Pines.

As a matter of fact, we look to see a very large reflex emigration in this country. The south affords great opportunities in agricultural and horticultural lines, especially in agriculture. This wonderful portion of the mountain region also offers greater opportunities than are left now in the most westerly states of Washington, Oregon, California and Nevada. We have always said that when the immediate opportunities of the coast region were exhausted by colonists from the east, there would be a reflex movement of population that would powerfully enter into Nevada, and would reclaim every acre of land available within its borders. We see something of this movement even now, and expect to see a vast deal more of it within the next decade. For Nevada is fast coming into its own as the chief remaining Land of Opportunity.

Advances of Medical Sciences

Recent discoveries in medicine due to research and experimentation have established the fact that many of the most baffling diseases are of bacterial origin. Among these may be mentioned rheumatism, tetanus (lockjaw), diphtheria, typhoid fever, spinal meningitis, tuberculosis to a certain degree, rabies and recently asthma, hay fever and whooping cough. Hay fever, so prevalent in this vicinity, has long been dreaded but recent experimentation shows decided results under proper supervision of many varieties of germs found in the respiratory tract are grown in the culture media.

The products of the bacteria are obtained from the body cells of the bacteria by filtration through porcelain filters, and preserved by addition of suitable agents to prevent deterioration. This serum is administered in amount according to the severity of each individual case.

In hay fever the reaction from the serum produces some discomfort for a day or two, then symptoms gradually disappear and in cases treated up to date, the attacks for the season are cured. The body resistance to the disease is greatly raised and subsequent attacks, as far as we have gone, will be very light if they appear at all.

Hay fever has long been dreaded as a scourge to those afflicted; many who are unable to change climate or residence must remain at home and endure the suffering produced by this dreaded disease.

In this vicinity physicians believe the exciting cause is the pollen blown from the sage, together with the dust and changeable climate and an irritation of the membranes of the respiratory tract and eyes, causing an inflammation which makes a suitable ground for the several varieties of bacteria to multiply.

With the use of the serum it is hoped to be able to successfully treat those affected at home, and once the body resistance is raised the individual need no longer fear the approach of the dry summer months.

CRUSHER PLANT FOR BUCKHORN

GEORGE WINGFIELD MAKING A NOTABLE IMPROVEMENT AT VALUABLE PROPERTY.

When George Wingfield decided that he would not accept $1,000,000 for the Buckhorn mining properties he determined to open up the mine extensively and equip it with a modern mill plant, says the Salt Lake Telegram. This has required a great deal of money, all of which he has taken from his own strong box, but it is said that he has a proposition that will pay him big returns on his investment for a long time in the future.

The crusher building of the 350-ton treatment plant of the Buckhorn Mines company has assumed an appearance of near completion. The crusher is already erected. The concrete foundations for ball and tube mills are in place and the foundation for the circular steel ore bin is in course of construction.

Following out the system inaugurated at the other isolated camps in the state, Owner Wingfield has made the usual noteworthy provisions for the comfort of the working force. The main dining hall has been in use since July 3. One of the connecting wings of the hotel has been commenced. While awaiting the completion of this building the men are scattered around town in hotels and cabins.

After many vicissitudes—the severe winter following the discovery of the camp in 1909, the washing out of the Eureka & Palisade railroad in the spring of 1910—Buckhorn has finally emerged as the center of population in Eureka county. Today the bulk of the traffic over the railroad is between Palisade and Blackburn. The latter station is the Buckhorn shipping point.

The work of the last week on the Centennial group, south of the town, has been favorable enough in its disclosures to demonstrate that the main Buckhorn lode has a length of at least three miles.

Lippincott, my employer (Lippincott & Co., Department Store, 284 to 314 Market Street, Wilmington, Del.) recommended to me Eckman's Alternative, and upon his suggestion I began taking it at once.
